Felipe Galindo, better known as Feggo, is an award-winning artist based in Washington Heights. This exhibit features recent works on paper from the series “Magic Realism in Manhattan” which includes humorous visual commentaries about animals, people and life in New York City. Some of these works have been published in the US, Mexico, Europe and Japan.

“The inspiration to create my works comes from different sources, from everyday life, art and world cultures. My drawings intend to engage the audience and inspire them to reflect on their surroundings, society and history. I use the universal languages of humor and art, to create whimsical and surreal images that encourage the viewer to find the unexpected among the familiar. My work is about seeing the things we take for granted in a different way.” - Feggo
