NEIGHBORS FOOD RELIEF FUND WORK CONTINUES

Since its establishment this spring, the Columbia Neighbors Food Relief Fund has distributed more than $100,000 to local organizations fighting hunger in Morningside Heights, Harlem, Washington Heights, and Inwood. The donations collected through the Columbia Community Service (CCS) Food Relief Project and the Medical Center Neighborhood Fund continue to support food pantries, food distribution organizations, and organizations that have expanded their missions to include fighting food insecurity. Some of those organizations include PA'LANTE, CLOTH, Holyrood Church, and more.

Columbia has also developed a partnership with The Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine to distribute meals made by Columbia Dining employees through the Cathedral's social services arm, Cathedral Community Cares. Since June 15, 1,000 meals have been distributed every day, and the program is set to continue through September 7.

COLUMBIA REOPENING IN THE FALL

The preparations are underway for Columbia's reopening in September and the return of some students to campus. Signage has been installed across campus to indicate required public health practices.

Masks are required on campus at all times, unless a person is in a private room with the door closed, and physical distancing standards will be enforced across campus. While Columbia's campus will remain open to the public, building access will be limited to affiliates who can be tested for COVID-19 and complete daily symptom self-checks. Community Shuttle service will continue to operate at limited capacity.
