MANHATTANVILLE MARKET FOOD HALL OPENS

The multiconcept food hall Manhattanville Market, put together by chef and television personality Franklin Becker, opened on Friday, June 25 at the Jerome L. Greene Science Center on Columbia's West Harlem campus. The food hall features original fare that represent a range of flavors and draw inspiration from the five boroughs of New York City and beyond.

Currently, there are four offerings in the hall:

- Chef Chris Scott's Butterfunk Biscuit features a variety of sandwiches served on a biscuit recipe passed down for more than four generations.
- Chef Becker's Benny Casanova's specializes in Sicilian pizza, ten-inch square pies with a crispy crust.
- The Botanist, also from Becker, makes healthy salads with fresh-cut herbs and greens from their climate-controlled grow cabinets.
- Shai, Becker's final offering at the food hall, has hummus, falafel, chicken shawarma, and vegetable dishes, such as chickpea stew and parsley salad.

Manhattanville Market is open daily from 11AM to 7PM for takeout, delivery, and sit-down dining, both inside and out. A fifth food vendor, full-service Spanish tapas restaurant Olivia, will open in fall 2021. Learn more at neighbors.columbia.edu/manhattanvillemarket.

CCS AWARDS $300,000 IN GRANTS

Over the last year, CCS collected donations from Columbia, Barnard, and Teachers College faculty and staff to support local organizations. In June, the initiative awarded $300,000 in grants to 52 organizations that work in the areas of food insecurity, education and social services. Some highlights include:

- $60,000 to 8 organizations that provide meals to people in need.
- $154,000 to 31 organizations that will support students with educational enrichment.
- $86,000 to 13 organizations that provide vital health and social services to some of the most at-need in our community.
